A Human Rights Based Approach to Housing

A human rights-based approach to housing is one that focuses on ensuring that every Canadian has access to a safe and affordable place to call home. It is an approach that is integrally linked to other essential issues Canadians are facing today, like homelessness, poverty and the need to create opportunities for all Canadians to thrive. It is also an approach that is grounded in the core a human rights-based approach to housing, as well as the key milestone of establishing Canada's first ever National Housing Strategy. But, a wide range of diverse and insightful thoughts and opinions was heard. Some wanted the Government to focus on concrete actions to help those in greatest need, and measures to prevent people from falling into housing need or homelessness. Some Canadians

Approach to Housing Discussion Paper: A Human Rights-based ...

To prevent and end homelessness, a human rights approach to housing must clearly focus on reducing inequality and exclusion. 4. Principles Two key principles of a rights-based approach to housing are participation and choice. We agree with Paradis (2018) emphasis on rights-based participation of people with lived experience of homelessness. As she states, the participation of people
