Arguably, therefore, it is crucial that health professionals are offered an opportunity to critically reflect on their assumptions around palliative care, and to take time to explore their feelings toward death and dying, in a safe, facilitated environment. As part of a doctoral study, the authors developed a one-day course for health professionals entitled Working with death, dying and Project MUSE - Unsettling Assumptions

In Unsettling Assumptions, editors Pauline Greenhill and Diane Tye link gender studies with traditional and popular culture studies to examine how tradition and gender can intersect to unsettle assumptions about culture and its study.
